UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEVADA

RIGHTHAVEN LLC, a Nevada limitedliability company,

Plaintiff,

v.

CENTER FOR INTERCULTURAL
ORGANIZING, a not-for-profit Oregon entity;
and KAYSE JAMA, an individual,

Defendants.

Case No.: 2:10-cv-01322-JCM-LRL

PLAINTIFF'S REPONSE TO ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND, ALTERNATIVELY, REQUEST FOR A CONITNUANCE TO CONDUCT DISCOVERY PURSUANT TO FRCP 56(f)

Plaintiff Righthaven LLC ("Righthaven") hereby submits this Response to the Order to Show Cause and Request to Conduct Discovery Pursuant to FRCP 56(f) (the "Response") as to why Righthaven's copyright infringement claims against Defendants Center for Intercultural Organizing (“CIO”) and Kayse Jama (“Mr. Jama”; collectively with CIO known herein as the “Defendants”) should not be dismissed under the 107 U.S.C. § 107 Fair Use exception.

Righthaven’s Response is supported by the accompanying declaration of Shawn A. Mangano, Esq. (the “Mangano Decl.”), and is based on the pleadings and papers on file in this action, any oral argument allowed by this Court, and on any other matter of which this Court takes notice.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

I. INTRODUCTION

Righthaven welcomes the opportunity to address the Court’s apparent concern that the copyright infringement claims asserted against Defendants may be precluded by a fair use defense. Let there be no mistake, when the Court undertakes the fair use analysis required by several decisions by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit (the “Ninth Circuit”), along with decisional law from the Supreme Court of the United States (the “Supreme Court”), it will clearly understand the viability of the copyright infringement claims before it.

Simply put, Righthaven’s infringement claims involve the 100% copying and unauthorized use by Defendants of a copyright protected original work of authorship by Lynnette Curtis entitled “Misdemeanor violations leading to deportations” (the “Work”). (Compl. Ex. 1, Doc. #1, 1-1 at 2-4.) Specifically, the Work reflects over 30 paragraphs of research and writing by Ms. Curtis. (See id.) Defendants, without any creative, intellectual effort or critical contributions on their part, used 100% of the results of Ms. Curtis’ efforts their own social and economic purposes without making any effort to obtain consent or authorization for doing so. (Compl. Ex. 2, Doc. #1-1 at 6-7.) While not as shocking to the conscious as the theft of a precious family heirloom, Righthaven asserts that Defendants’ infringing conduct amounts to the theft of an equally valuable item – the copyright protected creative literary efforts of an author, which should not be excused by a finding of fair use.

As Righthaven will explain with citations to controlling Ninth Circuit precedent, the statutory Fair Use exception codified under 107 U.S.C. § 107 does not excuse the Defendants’ 100% unauthorized replication of the Work. Likewise, CIO’s status as a federally recognized non-profit organization does not relieve Defendants of liability under the Fair Use exception for their unauthorized copying, and use, of 100% of the Work. CIO's apparent donation-based business model also does not permit Defendants to misappropriate the entirety of another's literary work for display on their website under the auspices of fair use – rather such use supports a finding against fair use. While Righthaven is understandably sensitive to the possible concern that its copyright infringement claim has unfairly targeted a non-profit entity which is engaged in admirable civic and interest group endeavors, this is simply not the case. For profit or not-for-profit entities are not permitted to steal the entirety of another's copyright protected material for their own use without contributing even a shred of original content or critical criticism and have such conduct sanctioned under the statutory rubric of fair use. As the Ninth Circuit has explained:

The fair use doctrine is not a license for corporate theft, empowering a court to ignore a copyright whenever it determines the underlying work contains materials of possible public importance.

Worldwide Church of God v. Philadelphia Church of God, Inc., 227 F.3d 1110, 1115-16 (9th Cir. 2000) (“Worldwide Church”)(emphasis added).

From the standpoint of applying the statutory factors governing the Court's analysis, Righthaven is confident that Defendants' 100% unauthorized replication and use of the Work cannot qualify for fair use protection. As demonstrated below, Righthaven asserts the following with regard to the statutory fair use factors in view of Defendants' conduct:

- The purpose and character of use (17 U.S.C. § 107(1)) does not support a finding of fair use because Defendants failed to contribute even a scintilla of content to or otherwise transform the Work for any purpose with meaningful commentary or criticism. Rather, Defendants merely engaged in the cyberspace equivalent of making a Xerox copy of the Work and used it on virtual signage for its organization without any contribution on their part aside from their proverbial photocopying efforts.

1 ● The nature of the Work (17 U.S.C. § 107(2)) does not support a finding of 2 fair use because it clearly represents Ms. Curtis’ creative literary endeavors and, despite 3 possessing factual content, is copyright protected and which Defendants have taken the 4 entirety of without authorization.

5 ● The amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the 6 copyrighted work as a whole (17 U.S.C. § 107(3)) does not support a finding of fair use 7 because Defendants copied and used, without any associated comments or critical 8 analysis, 100% of the Work at-issue.

9 ● Defendants’ infringing conduct has also detrimentally effected the use and 10 potential market for or the value of the Work ((17 U.S.C. § 107(4)) because they have 11 replicated 100% of the copyrighted content, which results in an economic benefit for CIO 12 and which detrimentally impacts the original holder of the material.

13 Succinctly stated, the Fair Use exception simply does not apply to this case in view of the facts 14 before the Court and in view of controlling Ninth Circuit and other cited precedent. In fact, 15 Righthaven maintains that the only appropriate result from the Court’s analysis should be a 16 finding, as a matter of law, that Defendants are not entitled to claim fair use.

17 Procedurally, Righthaven maintains that the Court cannot dismiss the Complaint in view 18 of the record before it. To the extent the Order to Show Cause (“OSC”) is predicated on the 19 Court’s sua sponte authority to determine the merits of the copyright infringement claims before 20 it under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) (“Rule 12(b)(6)”), Righthaven’s claims simply 21 cannot be properly dismissed under a fair use analysis in view of the applicable standard.
22 Assuming, arguendo, the Court is still inclined to take this drastic step, it must provide 23 Righthaven with leave to amend to potentially correct any defective allegations in view of a 24 dismissal order.

25 To the extent the OSC is predicated on the Court’s sua sponte authority to dispose of 26 claims before it pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 (“Rule 56”), Righthaven’s claims 27 are unquestionably not amenable to adjudication given the materials before the Court and given 28 that absolutely no discovery has been conducted. To the extent the Court finds against

1 Righthaven under a Rule 56 analysis, Righthaven respectfully requests an opportunity to conduct 2 discovery pursuant to Rule 56(f).

3 In sum, Righthaven asserts, as argued below, that the only result which is ripe for 4 adjudication given the record presented and in view of the controlling case law is a 5 determination, as a matter of law, that Defendants are not entitled to claim fair use. Righthaven 6 respectfully encourages the Court to enter such a finding after performing a fair use analysis in 7 view of the record before it.

8 9 II. FACTS

10 Righthaven filed this copyright infringement action against the Defendants on August 5, 11 2010. (Compl. ¶¶ 1, 27-39, Doc. #1 ¶¶ 1, 27-39.) As set forth below, the Court must accept 12 these allegations as true for purposes of determining the viability of Righthaven's claims in view 13 of the Fair Use exception under Rule 12(b)(6). Moreover, as set forth below, the Court must 14 draw all reasonable inferences from the record in Righthaven's favor under Rule 56 in deciding 15 the merits of a fair use defense in this case. Righthaven asserts that its claims survive scrutiny 16 under either of these procedural standards. In fact, if any dismissal or adjudication is warranted 17 following the Court's review, it should be a finding that Defendants cannot, as a matter of law, 18 rely on a fair use defense.

19 Righthaven has asserted ownership of the infringed Work and has submitted evidence of 20 registration of the Work with the United States Copyright Office. (Id. ¶ 8, ¶ 23, Ex. 3; Doc. # 1 ¶ 21 8, ¶ 23, #1-1 at 9.) Righthaven contends that on or about July 8, 2010, the Defendants copied 22 and posted a 100% copy of the Work on their publicly available Internet domain located at 23 <interculturalorganizing.org> (the "Website"). (Compl. ¶¶ 5-6, 11, Ex. 2; Doc. #1 ¶¶ 5-6, 11, #1-24 1 at 6-7.) This Response is filed based on the Court's November 15, 2010 issuance of the OSC, 25 which requested Righthaven address why its copyright infringement claims should not be 26 dismissed under the Fair Use exception. (Doc. #12.)

1 III. STANDARDS GOVERNING THE COURT'S ANALYSIS

3 A. Procedural Standards Applicable to the OSC

4 Righthaven is unclear as to the procedural basis upon which the Court has issued the 5 OSC, but it understands from the contents of the OSC that the Court has requested briefing and a 6 hearing concerning potential dismissal of the copyright infringement claims before it based the 7 Fair Use exception. (Doc. #12.) Righthaven maintains the Court is only vested with sua sponte 8 dismissal authority under Rule 12(b)(6) or Rule 56.

9 Assuming the Court is exercising sua sponte dismissal authority pursuant to Rule 10 12(b)(6), such action is only “appropriate when it is clear that no relief could be granted under 11 any set of facts that could be proven consistent with the allegations set forth in the complaint.”
12 See Burnett v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp., 491 F.Supp.2d 962, 966 (C.D. Cal. 2007). All 13 allegations asserted in the complaint must be construed in favor of the non-moving party and all 14 material allegations – including any reasonable inferences drawn from same – must be accepted 15 as true by the Court under a Rule 12(b)(6) analysis. See id. Where dismissal is granted, leave to 16 amend should be granted unless doing so is futile. In re Silicon Graphics, Inc. Sec. Litig., 183 17 F.3d 970, 991 (9th Cir. 1999).

18 In the event the Court is exercising sua sponte dismissal authority pursuant to Rule 56, 19 different standards apply. District courts “possess the power to enter summary judgment sua 20 sponte, so long as the losing party was on notice that she had to come forward with all of her 21 evidence.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 326 (1986). In such circumstances, the case 22 must have been provided with a sufficient opportunity to appreciate the discovery topics at-issue 23 and to conduct discovery on such topics. Portsmouth Square, Inc. v. Shareholders Protective 24 Comm., 770 F.2d 866, 869 (9th Cir. 1985). Granting summary judgment requires the absence of 25 any genuine issue of material fact, thus entitling a party to entry of judgment as a matter of law.
26 FED. R. CIV. P. 56 (c). Adjudication may be delayed in order to provide a party potentially facing 27 an adverse decision to conduct discovery and present the court with additional evidence. FED. R.
28 CIV. P. 56 (f). With regard to fair use, the Court may only conduct an analysis where, as a matter

1 of law, the circumstances present dispositive presumed or admitted facts. See Fisher v. Dees, 2 794 F.2d 432, 435-36 (9th Cir. 1986); accord Burnett., 491 F.Supp.2d at 967.

3 Application of the foregoing standards in view of the record before the Court 4 demonstrates that dismissal is unwarranted based on the Fair Use exception. In fact, Righthaven 5 maintains the record supports a determination that the Fair Use exception does not apply, as a 6 matter of law, to the copyright infringement claims before the Court.

8 B. Standards Applicable to the Court's Fair Use Analysis

9 Substantively, when a copyright defendant asserts the affirmative defense of fair use, the 10 district court must consider the following factors: “(1) the purpose and character of the use; (2) 11 the nature of the copyrighted work; (3) the amount and substantiality of the portion used in 12 relation to the work as a whole; and (4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for the 13 work or the value of the work.” A&M Records, Inc. v. Napster, Inc., 239 F.3d 1004, 1014 (9th 14 Cir. 2001) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also 17 U.S.C. § 107. The fair use doctrine 15 requires a “case-by-case analysis.” Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music, Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 577
16 (1994). Courts are required to consider and weigh all four factors when conducting a fair use 17 analysis. Id. Conducting such an analysis as a matter of law requires that controlling facts be 18 presumed or admitted. See Fisher, 794 F.2d at 435-36; accord Burnett., 491 F.Supp.2d at 967.

19 Righthaven asserts that Defendants’ unauthorized 100% copying and use of the Work in 20 view of the above standards precludes dismissal of its copyright infringement claims. Such a 21 result would run contrary to controlling Ninth Circuit precedent. In fact, entry of a finding that 22 Defendants’ cannot, as a matter of law, rely on a fair use defense is compelled upon proper 23 application of the Ninth Circuit precedent and the other authorities cited below.

24
25 IV. ARGUMENT

26 In undertaking a fair use analysis, one fundamental and transcendent fact is crystal clear – 27 that Defendants blatantly copied and used 100% of the Work without authorization. As 28 emphasized by the Ninth Circuit in Worldwide Church, supra, which rejected, as a matter of law,

1 a non-profit organization's fair use defense for the 100% unauthorized replication and use of an 2 author's copyrighted work:

3 We have found no published case holding that fair use protected 4 the verbatim copying, without criticism, of a written work in its 5 entirety.

6 Worldwide Church, 27 F.3d 1110, 1120.

7 This case is no different than Worldwide Church. This Court, as the Ninth Circuit panel 8 did in Worldwide Church, must engage in the four factor fair use analysis set forth under 107 9 U.S.C. § 107 in view of Defendants' unauthorized taking and use of 100% of the Work at-issue.
10 When this analysis is correctly performed, the outcome should be the same as that in Worldwide
11 Church – a finding, as a matter of law, against fair use by the Defendants.

12 13 A. The Worldwide Church Decision's Controlling Impact on This Court's Fair Use 14 Analysis

15 The Ninth Circuit panel's decision in Worldwide Church, which resulted in a finding, as a 16 matter of law, against fair use by a non-profit religious entity with regard to its unauthorized, 17 wholesale copying and use of a literary work, controls this Court's analysis. As explained 18 herein, the similarities between the defendants' conduct in Worldwide Church and those of the 19 Defendants in this case compel a finding, as a matter of law, against fair use. Dismissal of 20 Righthaven's infringement claims in view of Worldwide Church, as well as in view of the other 21 cases cited herein, would be a shocking result that would almost certainly face reversal on review 22 by the Ninth Circuit.

23 In Worldwide Church, the parties were two non-profit religious organizations – 24 Worldwide Church of God ("WCG") and Philadelphia Church of God, Inc. ("PCG"). Worldwide
25 Church, 227 F.3d at 1112. A prominent WCG pastor had written a copyrighted work entitled 26 "Mystery of the Ages" ("MOA"). Id. WCG used MOA in promoting its non-profit ministry for 27 many years but at some point stopped doing so two years after the author-pastor's death. Id. at 28 1113. Some years later, two former WCG ministers founded PCG. Id. As part of PCG's new

1 ministry, it began copying and distributing MOA “verbatim, deleting only MCG from the 2 copyright page . . .” without requesting permission from WCG. Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 3 1113. WCG sued PCG for copyright infringement based on its wholesale, unauthorized copying 4 of MOA. Id. at 1113-14. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of PCG by 5 finding that PCG’s alleged infringement qualified as fair use. Id. at 1114.

6 On review, the Ninth Circuit reversed the district court’s decision and found, as a matter 7 of law, PCG was “not entitled to claim fair use.” for the unauthorized 100% copying of MOA.
8 Id. at 1121. Moreover, the Ninth Circuit panel directed the district court to enter a permanent 9 injunction in WCG’s favor and to conduct a trial on damages “[b]ecause infringement by PCG of 10 WCG’s copyright is undisputed, barring fair use . . .” Id.

11 In its decision, the Ninth Circuit panel rejected a number of arguments which will likely 12 be echoed by the Defendants in this case. First, the panel rejected PCG’s contention that its 13 copying of the MOA qualified as fair use because it was for “non-profit religious and educational 14 purposes.” Id. at 1114. The panel reasoned “[t]he crux of the profit/nonprofit distinction [under 15 a fair use analysis] is not whether the sole motive of the use is monetary gain but whether the 16 user stands to profit from exploitation of the copyrighted material without paying the customary 17 price.” Id. at 1117 (quoting Haper & Row Publishers, Inc. v. Nation Enter., 471 U.S.539, 562 18 (1985)). In this regard, PCG, despite its non-profit status, was found to have “unquestionably” 19 profited by providing the MOA at no cost to its members and through the use of same to 20 potentially generate new memberships. Id. at 1118. Moreover, by virtue of the relief entered, 21 which included directions to the district court to enter a permanent injunction and to proceed to a 22 trial on damages, the Worldwide Church panel found a non-profit liable for copyright 23 infringement. Id. at 1121. This stunning result on appeal from a record upon which the district 24 court granted summary judgment in favor PCG on fair use grounds only serves to reinforce that 25 non-profit entities cannot escape liability for copyright infringement based on their non-profit 26 status or their altruistic institutional goals and purposes. Accordingly, the Ninth Circuit panel’s 27 decision in Worldwide Church first stands for the proposition, as applied to this case, that 28

1 Defendants' cannot escape copyright infringement liability because the unauthorized display was 2 made on a non-profit entity's website.

3 The Worldwide Church decision also controls this Court's fair use analysis because it 4 involved the 100% duplication and unauthorized use of a literary work. See Worldwide Church, 5 227 F.3d at 1113. The 100% duplication at-issue in Worldwide Church transcended the Ninth 6 Circuit panel's four factor analysis and unquestionably resulted in a finding, as a matter of law, 7 against fair use. With regard to the purpose and character of the use, which is the first factor 8 under a fair use analysis, the panel found that PCG's wholesale replication of the MOA weighed 9 against fair use because "PCG's copying of WCG's MOA in its entirety bespeaks of no 10 'intellectual labor and judgment.'" Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1117. The panel additionally 11 observed, with regard to the "amount and substantiality" third fair use factor, "[w]hile 'wholesale 12 copying does not preclude fair use per se,' copying an entire work 'militates against a finding of 13 fair use.'" Id. (quoting Hustler Magazine, Inc. v. Moral Majority, Inc., 796 F.2d 1148, 1155 (9th 14 Cir. 1986)). The panel then explained that "the fact that a substantial portion of the infringing 15 work was copied verbatim is evidence of the qualitative value of the copied material, both to the 16 originator and to the plagiarist who seeks to profit from marketing someone else's copyrighted 17 expression." Id. at 1118 (quoting Harper & Row Publishers, Inc., 471 U.S. at 565)). In all 18 practicality, the Ninth Circuit's decision in Worldwide Church virtually established a 19 presumption against a finding of fair use in cases of unauthorized, wholesale copying of a 20 protected work. The Court should proceed with its analysis in this case with an appropriate 21 degree of skepticism toward a finding of fair use given Defendants' 100% unauthorized 22 duplication of the Work.

23 In short, the Court's fair use analysis should be guided by the rationale and findings of 24 the Ninth Circuit panel's decision in Worldwide Church, with the enhancement of the additional 25 authorities cited herein. Doing so will provide the Court with clear guidance as to the 26 applicability of a fair use defense where the entirety of a work is copied without permission by a 27 non-profit entity. When this guidance is followed, Righthaven trusts the Court will properly 28

1 find, as a matter of law, that Defendants are not entitled to claim fair use as a defense to their 2 infringing conduct.

4 B. Proper Application of the Four Factor Analysis Should Result in a Finding That 5 Defendants Are Not Entitled to Claim Fair Use as a Defense to Their Unauthorized
6 100% Duplication of the Work

7 As discussed above, the Court is required to undertake a four factor analysis to determine 8 whether Defendants' are entitled to shelter themselves from copyright infringement liability 9 based on the Fair Use exception. Righthaven asserts that Defendants are not entitled to a fair 10 use defense, as a matter of law, when this four factor analysis is properly undertaken – 11 particularly given the verbatim replication of the Work at-issue in this case.

12
13 1. The Purpose and Character of Use Factor Weighs Strongly in Righthaven's
14 Favor Given Defendants' Unauthorized 100% Copying of the Work

15 The first factor in the fair use analysis calls for consideration of “the purpose and 16 character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit 17 educational purposes.” 17 U.S.C. § 107(1). This factor weighs heavily in Righthaven's favor in 18 view of Defendants' unauthorized 100% replication and use of the Work on CIO's Website.

19 In considering the purpose and character of the use, courts must determine whether the 20 alleged infringing publication, when comparatively viewed with the copyrighted work, “merely 21 replaces the object of the original creation or instead adds a further purpose or different 22 character.” Napster, Inc., 239 F.3d at 1015. Stated differently, the “purpose and the character of 23 use” factor involves resolving the question as to “whether the allegedly fair use was 24 ‘transformative,’ i.e., whether the second use ‘adds something new, with a further purpose or 25 different character, altering the first with new expression, meaning, or message.’” Los Angeles 26 News Serv. v. CBS Broad., Inc., 305 F.3d 924, 938 (9th Cir. 2002) (quoting Campbell, 510 U.S.
27 at 579). This inquiry has a wide-ranging impact on the fair use analysis: “the more 28 transformative the new work, the less will be the significance of the other factors, like commercialism, that may weigh against a finding of fair use.” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 579. The inverse of this principle must also be true: the less transformative the infringing work, the other factors that may support a finding of fair use will be less significant.

Here, the Court is presented with a case of the unauthorized 100% replication and use of the Work by Defendants, of which CIO is a non-profit entity. As discussed above, the Ninth Circuit’s decision in Worldwide Church establishes that an entity cannot escape copyright infringement liability merely based on its not-for-profit status. Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1118. Moreover, with regard to the first prong of the fair use analysis, the Worldwide Church panel reasoned that copying a literary work “in its entirety bespeaks no ‘intellectual labor and judgment.’ It merely ‘supersedes the object’ of the original work.” Id. at 1117. Furthermore, while the infringing party in Worldwide Church was of non-profit status, the entity still used the wholesale duplicated work for “profit” by deriving a benefit in terms of delivering free content to its members and by potentially increasing its membership in making such content available to others. Id. at 1118. In short, the Worldwide Church panel found that the act of wholesale copying a protected work demonstrated absolutely no transformative efforts by the infringing party, despite being a non-profit entity, and its use in connection with its business operations compelled a finding that the first factor weighed against fair use. Id. at 1117-18.

The decision in Worldwide Church does not stand alone. Other courts faced with the issue of wholesale or verbatim copying have likewise concluded that such infringing conduct weighs against a finding of fair use. See Campbell, 510 U.S. at 587-88 (whether “a substantial portion of the infringing work was copied verbatim from the copyrighted work is a relevant question . . . for it may reveal a dearth of transformative character or purpose under the first factor . . .”); Walt Disney Prods. v. Air Pirates, 581 F.2d 751, 757 (9th Cir. 1978) (acknowledging that “near-verbatim copying” generally precludes a finding of fair use); Los Angeles Time v. Free Republic, No. 98-7840, 1999 WL 33644483, at *10 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 8, 1999) (“There is nothing transformative about copying the entirety or portions of a work verbatim.”) (Free Republic I”).

1 The claimed infringement presented to this Court falls squarely within the analysis 2 undertaken in and findings made in Worldwide Church and which is additionally supported by 3 the above cited authorities. The infringement at-issue in this case contains an exact, 100%, 4 duplication of the Work. (Compl. Ex. 1, Doc. #1, 1-1 at 2-4, Ex. 2, Doc. #1-1 at 6-7.) No
5 modifications or revisions are contained in the infringing copy of the Work displayed on CIO's 6 Website. (Compl. Ex. 2, Doc. #1-1 at 6-7.) In fact, the infringing copy of the work is nothing 7 more than a cut-and-paste reprint of the Work. (Compl. Ex. 2, Doc. #1-1 at 6-7.) This form of 8 mindless infringing conduct clearly contains absolutely no "transformative value" under the first 9 fair use factor. As the Worldwide Church panel reasoned, to satisfy this requirement, "[t]here 10 must be real, substantial condensation of the materials, and intellectual labor and judgment 11 bestowed thereon; and not merely the facile use of the scissors, or extracts of the essential parts, 12 constituting the chief value of the original work." Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1117 13 (emphasis added). Ultimately, it appears that the Defendants' infringing conduct – a wholesale, 14 verbatim, unmodified reproduction of the original Work – is precisely the nature of infringement 15 for which the transformative value requirement was devised. These circumstances weigh heavily 16 against a finding of fair use under the first analysis factor.

17 Furthermore, the Defendants' unauthorized display of the Work unquestionably 18 constitutes a commercial use – not a sanctioned non-profit educational one – under the first fair 19 use factor. While the Defendants maintain that "CIO's purpose is to educate and assist 20 immigrants and refugees who have recently relocated to the United States ..." (Def.'s Reply to 21 Mot. to Dismiss at 2:21, Doc. #10), the evidence plainly suggests that Defendants either 22 received, or attempted to receive, a financial gain through ownership and operation of the 23 Website. A cursory review of the Website clearly depicts numerous donation banners and 24 membership options, in which Internet visitors to the website have the opportunity to join CIO 25 and pay required dues or to simply donate directly to CIO. (Mangano Decl. ¶ 3, Ex. 1.) Thus, as 26 Internet users viewing the unauthorized, verbatim copy of the Work were exposed to requests for 27 donations to or invitations to become members of CIO, along with viewing other advertising 28

1 content, there can be no dispute that the Defendants' unauthorized display of the Work was 2 motivated, at least in part, by commercial gain.

3 In addition to advancing the Defendants' efforts to generate donations to CIO and to 4 increase ad revenues by attracting users to the Website, the act of publicly displaying the Work
5 may have also helped generate good will for the Website and for CIO. While the evidence 6 clearly suggests that the unauthorized wholesale duplication of the Work likely contributed to the 7 Defendants' financial benefit, the Ninth Circuit has nevertheless held that a "[d]irect economic 8 benefit is not required to demonstrate a commercial use." See Napster, Inc., 239 F.3d at 1015.
9 In other words, in the context of fair use, "monetary gain is not the sole criterion . . ." Worldwide 10 Church, 227 F.3d at 1117. Instead, the threshold for commercial use can be satisfied if the 11 defendant's use of the infringed work generates good will for, and promotes, the defendant's 12 underlying operation. See Free Republic I, 1999 WL 33644483, at *15-16 (finding of fair use is 13 supported by "the fact that defendants' web page is enhanced by use of the articles, and that [sic] 14 fact that the copying assists in generating support, both financial and non-financial, for their 15 operation"). This concept is directly applicable at present. Logic dictates that the Defendants' 16 display of immigration and deportation-related information, such as the unauthorized, wholesale 17 replication and display of the Work on the Website directly enhances the Website's purpose, 18 helps generate interest in CIO's purpose, potentially leads to new members/viewers for CIO, and 19 likely results in increased donations to CIO as is invited through its banners on its Website.
20 Accordingly, the Defendants' unauthorized, wholesale copying and display of the Work should 21 be seen as being intended not only to increase potential revenues, but also to advance the 22 Website's underlying function, thereby increasing its good will. Under Ninth Circuit precedent, 23 such circumstances constitute commercial use under the first fair use analysis prong – even 24 despite CIO's non-profit status. See Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1118.

25 In sum, the Defendants' unauthorized 100% copying of the Work was entirely devoid of 26 any transformative value. See id. at 1117. Moreover, Defendants' conduct employed verbatim 27 use of the Work on its Website, which constitutes a commercial use. See id. at 1117-18.

Accordingly, Righthaven asserts that, in view of the foregoing, the first factor in the Court's analysis weighs heavily against a finding of fair use.

2. The Work Entails Originality and Creative Expression, Thereby Weighing Against a Finding of Fair Use as to the Second Analysis Factor.

The second factor in the fair use analysis calls for consideration of "the nature of the copyrighted work." 17 U.S.C. § 107(2). This factor "turns on whether the work is informational or creative." Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1118. Righthaven asserts that this factor weighs strongly against a finding of fair use because the Work encompasses extensive originality and creative expression in over 30 paragraphs of authorship which was copied in its entirety by Defendants without authorization.

As a news article, the Work is admittedly based on fact. However, the manner in which the Work's content is structured and articulated demonstrates considerable creativity and effort undertaken by the author in bringing the material to print. Furthermore, regardless of the Work's arguably factual nature, the Defendants' copying of the Work is not somehow exempted from liability, particularly in light of the verbatim, wholesale nature of their infringing conduct.

The Defendants are not permitted to commit blatant copyright infringement simply because the Work's highly expressive attributes are coupled with substantial factual content. The "[c]reation of a nonfiction work, even a compilation of pure fact, entails originality." Harper & Row Publishers, Inc., 471 U.S. at 547. Moreover, written news articles reflect the reporter's creative endeavors in compiling a piece for dissemination. Los Angeles Times v. Free Republic, 54 U.S.P.Q.2d 1453, 1467 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 4, 2000) ("Free Republic II"). As noted by the court in Free Republic II, "a news reporter must determine which facts are significant and recount them in an interesting and appealing manner." Id.

The Work in this case, by Lynnette Curtis, concerns the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police force's interaction with the federal immigration authorities. (Compl. Ex. 1, Doc. #1, 1-1 at 2-4.) The Work reflects a distillation of facts derived from interviews and other sources, which were then presented by Ms. Curtis in a manner deigned to effectively report on the subject matter

1 while doing so in a fashion designed to capture and keep the reader's interest. (Compl. Ex. 1, 2 Doc. #1, 1-1 at 2-4.) Thus, while the Work undoubtedly contains considerable factual content, 3 the creative, expressive elements associated with Ms. Curtis' authorship of the Work cannot be 4 ignored by the Court when undertaking its analysis under the second fair use factor. In fact, Ms.
 5 Curtis' original efforts weigh against a finding of fair use under the second factor.

6 The Defendants' act of copying the Work in its entirety also weighs against a finding of 7 fair use under the second factor. The Ninth Circuit has previously found that a copyright 8 defendant's reliance on the second fair use factor may be diminished if the defendant made a 9 verbatim copy of the protected work in its entirety. Supermarket of Homes, Inc. v. San Fernando
 10 Valley Bd. of Realtors, 786 F.2d 1400, 1409 (9th Cir. 1986); see also Marcus v. Rowley, 695 11 F.2d 1171, 1177 (9th Cir. 1983) ("Even if it were true that plaintiff's book contained only facts, 12 this argument fails because defendant engaged in virtually verbatim copying."). Thus, even 13 assuming, arguendo, that the Court classifies the Work as primarily fact-based, the verbatim 14 nature of the Defendants' wholesale, infringing conduct further supports a finding against fair 15 use. Accordingly, Righthaven asserts that the second factor weighs strongly against a finding of 16 fair use.

17 18 3. Defendants' 100% Replication of the Work Unquestionably Weighs Against 19 a Finding of Fair Use Under the Third Analysis Factor.

20 The third factor examined under a fair use analysis requires the Court to consider "the 21 amount and substantiality of the portion used in related to the copyrighted work as a whole." See 22 17 U.S.C. § 107(2). Without question, this factor weighs against a finding of fair use given 23 Defendants' unauthorized copying of 100% of the Work for their own use.

24 As recognized by the Ninth Circuit, the copying of an entire work militates against a 25 finding of fair use. See Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1118; accord Hustler Magazine, Inc., 26 796 F.2d at 1155. As stated by the panel in Worldwide Church, "[w]e have found no published 27 case holding that fair use protected the verbatim copying, without criticism, of a written work in 28 its entirety." Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1120. The panel additionally noted that "the fact

1 that a substantial portion of the infringing work was copied verbatim is evidence of the 2 qualitative value of the copied material, both to the originator and to the plagiarist who seeks to 3 profit from marketing someone else's copyrighted expression.'" Id. at 1118 (quoting Harper & 4 Row Publishers, Inc., 471 U.S. at 565)).

5 Here, the Defendants copied a written work in its entirety without any criticism, comment 6 or other contribution. When viewing the "substantiality of the portion in relation to the 7 copyrighted work as a whole" the answer is crystal clear – 100% of the unauthorized copy was 8 taken from the copyrighted Work. No other result is possible. Accordingly, the third factor in 9 the Court's fair use analysis unquestionably weighs against a finding of fair use.

 11 4. Defendants' Unauthorized and Verbatim Copying of the Work Materially 12 Impairs the Value of, and Potential Market for, the Work.

13 The fourth factor examined under a fair use analysis requires the Court to consider "the 14 use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work." 17 U.S.C. § 107(4). As the 15 owner of the copyrighted Work, Righthaven is entitled to a presumption of market harm in light 16 of the commercial elements associated with the Defendants' infringement. See Sony Corp. of Am.
 17 v. Universal City Studios, Inc., 464 U.S. 417, 451 (1984)("Sony Corp."). Notwithstanding this 18 presumption, Defendants' wholesale, verbatim copying of the Work without authorization 19 materially impairs the value and market for the Work. Accordingly, this fourth factor weighs 20 against a finding of fair use.

21 The commercial elements surrounding the Defendants' unauthorized display of the Work 22 on CIO's Website, and the commercial elements of the Website in general, are such that material 23 impairment of the Work's market is presumed. In Sony Corp., the Supreme Court explained that 24 "[i]f the intended use is for commercial gain, that likelihood [of market harm] may be 25 presumed." Sony Corp., 464 U.S. at 451. As discussed earlier, Defendants' infringement 26 achieved a commercial advantage by offering the Work free of charge to those visiting the 27 Website in the hopes of attracting support for CIO's cause and which could additionally result in 28 the organization receiving donations or deriving the benefit of new membership fees from

Website visitors. Cf. Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1118. In view of the commercial nature of Defendants' wholesale misappropriation of the Work, the Court is compelled, at a minimum, to presume impairment of the Work's market and conclude that the fourth factor weighs against a finding of fair use absent the admission of sufficient, credible evidence required to rebut such a presumption. See Sony Corp., 464 U.S. at 451.

Even without affording Righthaven the presumption of market harm to which it is entitled given the commercial nature of Defendants' unauthorized 100% copying of the Work, the record in this case in view of the applicable case law definitively tips the fourth factor against a fair use finding. First, as opposed to a transformative work, "a work that merely supplants or supersedes another is likely to cause a substantially adverse impact on the potential market of the original." Sony Computer Entm't, Inc. v. Connectix Corp., 203 F.3d 596, 607 (9th Cir. 2000). The law is clear that "a work composed primarily of an original, particularly its heart, with little added or changed, is more likely to be a merely superseding use, fulfilling the demand for the original." Campbell, 510 U.S. at 587-88. In the Campbell decision, the Supreme Court explained that whether a work is copied verbatim is a relevant inquiry under the fourth fair use factor, as this may reveal "a greater likelihood of market harm . . ." Id. at 587. "[W]here the [defendant's] use is for the same intrinsic purpose as the copyright holder's . . . such use seriously weakens a claimed fair use." Worldwide Church, 227 F.3d at 1117 (emphasis added) (quoting Weissmann v. Freeman, 868 F.2d 1313, 1324 (2d Cir. 1989)).

Here, the Defendants cannot escape the fact that they engaged in the cyberspace equivalent of making a Xerox copy of the Work and then used the Xerox copy to advance their own organizational purpose. Defendants did nothing to alter the content of the Work or to use the Work in connection with critical discussion or examination. (Compl. Ex. 2, Doc. #1-1 at 6-7.) Stated differently, Defendants' unauthorized republication of the Work was entirely lacking in even a scintilla of transformational content or qualities. Such circumstances warrant the conclusion that Defendants' infringing conduct has likely caused a substantial impairment on the potential market for the Work and that Defendants' infringing copy of the Work fulfilled the

1 demand for the original. See Campbell, 510 U.S. at 587-88; Sony Computer Entm't, Inc., 203
2 F.3d at 607.

3 Additionally, the Court's analysis of the fourth fair use factor must consider "whether 4 unrestricted and widespread conduct of the sort engaged in by the defendant . . . would result in a 5 substantially adverse impact on the potential market for the original." See Campbell, 510 U.S. at 6 590 (internal quotation marks omitted). In this regard, the appropriate inquiry "must take 7 account not only of harm to the original but also of harm to the market for derivative works." Id.
8 (quoting Harper & Row Publishing, Inc., 471 U.S. at 568).¹ Such reasoning, when applied to the 9 instant case, clearly reflects the presence of potential market harm.

10 If numerous, additional Internet users were to replicate the Defendants' wholesale, 11 cyberspace Xerox copy of the Work, the market for both the Work and derivatives of the Work 12 would be inevitably diminished regardless of the intentions of each individual infringer. The 13 Ninth Circuit has held that the fourth fair use factor is not limited to market impairment; this 14 analysis also includes "the effect of the use on the value of the copyrighted work." Worldwide 15 Church of God, 227 F.3d at 1119 (quoting 17 U.S.C. § 107(4)) (emphasis in original). Thus, 16 "even copying for noncommercial purposes may impair the copyright holder's ability to obtain 17 the rewards that Congress intended him to have . . . [t]hose rewards need not be limited to 18 monetary rewards; compensation may take a variety of forms." Id. (quoting Sony Corp., 464 U.S.
19 at 450).

20 The potential reduction of a literary work's present and future market value resulting 21 from Internet-based copyright infringement is exemplified by the district court's holding in Free
22 Republic II. In Free Republic II, the defendants asserted a fair use defense to justify the posting 23 of the plaintiff's newspaper articles on the defendants' website. Free Republic II, 54 U.S.P.Q.2d 24 at 1455-59. In finding against fair use, the United States District Court for the Central District of 25 California explained that "[d]efendants use 'substitutes' for the originals, and has the potential of 26 lessening the frequency with which individuals visit plaintiffs' websites, of diminishing the 27

28 ¹ Similarly, in this analysis, "[a]ctual present harm need not be shown; such a requirement would leave the copyright holder with no defense against predictable damage." Sony Corp., 464 U.S. at 451.

1 market for the sale of archived articles, and decreasing the interest in licensing the articles.” Id.
2 at 1471.

3 The reasoning employed by the court in Free Republic II should be applied by this Court.
4 As the Defendants’ infringing conduct arguably substitutes for and supersedes the purpose of the 5 original Work given that it consists of a 100% replication of the Work, it takes very little, if any, 6 leap in deductive reasoning to conclude that readers of the Work on the CIO’s Website may be 7 diverted from, or elect not to read, the Work’s original source publication. Stated differently, 8 there is simply no intuitive motivation for someone reading the wholesale, 100% replication of 9 the Work on CIO’s Website to seek out and read the original version of the Work in any format – 10 such as an Internet website copy or a hard copy. Simply put, the reader has digested the content 11 and is in all likelihood through with the Work, thereby depriving the source publication of other 12 tangible and intangible benefits of increased readership, viewership and/or subscribership. These 13 virtually required logical inferences in view of Defendants’ infringing conduct clearly support a 14 finding of diminished value of the Work and of derivatively associated literary works available 15 from the source publication. Such a finding weighs against fair use under factor four of the 16 Court’s analysis.

17 While not yet a recognized consideration under the fourth fair use analysis factor, the 18 Court should at least appreciate the societal and economic benefits of protecting literary works 19 emanating from newspapers in light of the aggregate effect of Internet-based copyright 20 infringements. It is no secret that newspapers across the country are in distress due to declining 21 readership numbers. For instance, in 2009, the Washington Post reported that newspaper 22 circulation in the United States was at its lowest level in 70 years.² There is even a website 23 entitled: “newspaperdeathwatch.com” – a site dedicated to “chronicling the decline of 24 newspapers.”³ The decline of newspapers nationwide has coincided with the rise of the Internet, 25 and has thus concomitantly coincided with the rise of Internet-based copyright infringements 26 reflected by Defendants’ conduct. Furthermore, it is irrelevant that an online infringement of a

27 ² <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2009/10/26/AR2009102603272.html>

28 ³ <http://newspaperdeathwatch.com/> newspaper's copyright-protected material is not always attributable to directly competing news outlets. As a recent study by the Pew Internet and American Life Project found that "[t]hree-quarters of people who consume news online said they do so thanks to e-mails or posts on social media sites."⁴ Thus, whether the Internet-based copyright infringement of an article published by the Las Vegas Review-Journal is committed by the Las Vegas Sun, by the New York Times, or by the Defendants' Website, the unauthorized public display of that copyright-protected material still has the detrimental effect of diverting valuable Internet traffic away from the original source publication. As such, in addition to substantiating Righthaven's argument that infringing acts such as those committed by Defendants diminish the value of the Work and derivations thereof, the above circumstances also demonstrate the economic and societal benefits inherent in enforcing the rights of copyright holders in cases of Internet-based infringement. Righthaven asserts the Court should conclude that factor four weighs against finding of fair use based on the record before it. Such a finding would additionally further the societal and economic goals of enforcing the rights of copyright holders in the face of Internet-based infringement.

C. Righthaven's Procedural Concerns About Potential Dismissal by OSC

As argued above, Righthaven steadfastly maintains that it is entitled to a finding, as a matter of law, that Defendants are not entitled to claim fair use as a defense to their infringing conduct. This result, according to Righthaven's view of the record before the Court, is authorized by Rule 12(b)(6) or Rule 56 in view of controlling precedent such as Worldwide Church. The same result is not true should the Court be inclined to dismiss Righthaven's infringement claims on fair use grounds.

In the event the Court is inclined to grant sua sponte dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), it is reminded that such action is only "appropriate when it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of fact that could be proven consistent with the allegations set forth in the complaint." See Burnett, 491 F.Supp.2d at 966. Moreover, under a Rule 12(b)(6) analysis, the Court must construe all allegations asserted in the complaint in Righthaven's favor and all

⁴ <http://arstechnica.com/gadgets/news/2010/02/internet-overtakes-print-in-news-consumption-among-americans.ars>

1 material allegations - including any reasonable inferences drawn from same - must be accepted
2 as true. See id. Where dismissal is granted, leave to amend should be granted unless doing so is 3 futile. In re Silicon Graphics, Inc. Sec. Litig., 183 F.3d at 991. Given these standards, 4 Righthaven maintains that dismissal of its infringement claims would be wholly inappropriate.
5 That said, even if the Court were to grant dismissal, Righthaven respectfully requests leave to 6 amend to address any potential deficiencies in its allegations against Defendants.

7 In the event the Court is inclined to dismiss the copyright infringement claims before it 8 sua sponte pursuant to Rule 56, the Court is reminded that the party facing dismissal must have 9 been provided with a sufficient opportunity to appreciate the discovery topics at-issue and to 10 conduct discovery on such topics. See Portsmouth Square, Inc., 770 F.2d at 869. In this case, 11 Righthaven has not conducted even a shred of discovery. While Righthaven maintains that 12 discovery is largely unnecessary to adjudicate a finding against fair use given the record 13 presented, an analysis by the Court to the contrary may involve topics such as the commercial 14 nature of Defendants' infringing use of the Work that Righthaven has not had an opportunity to 15 fully appreciate or explore through the discovery process. As such, in the unlikely event the 16 Court is inclined to dismiss the infringement claims before it on fair use grounds, Righthaven 17 respectfully requests an opportunity to conduct discovery pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil 18 Procedure 56(f) on, at least, the topics set forth in the supporting Declaration of Shawn A.
19 Mangano, Esq. for such request.

20 21 V. CONCLUSION

22 Righthaven asserts that the Court's fair use analysis should be guided by the Ninth 23 Circuit's decision in Worldwide Church, as well as in view of the additional case law cited 24 above. When this analysis is properly conducted, Righthaven maintains that not only should its 25 claims survive the OSC, but the Court should find, as a matter of law, that Defendants are not 26 entitled to a fair use defense.

27 In the alternative, if the Court is inclined to dismiss the infringement claims before it 28 pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), Righthaven asks for leave to amend to correct any perceived

1 deficiencies in its allegations against Defendants. To the extent the Court is inclined to dismiss 2 the infringement claims before it pursuant to Rule 56, Righthaven respectfully requests an 3 opportunity to conduct discovery pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(f) on, at least, 4 the topics set forth in the Declaration of Shawn A. Mangano, Esq.

5 Righthaven additionally requests the Court enter such relief as it deems just and 6 appropriate in view of the record before it in this action.
